THE PROOF

"The $80 Billion That Vanishes Every Year"

Episode 2 – Flagship interview · single set · ~12-16 min

Tens of billions in value lost each year – not to corruption, to an accountability gap. APA claims it can measure the hole. Prove it.

FADE IN:

INT. APA STUDIO — DAY

A calm, premium set: low table, three chairs, deep teal-and-gold backdrop, the APA mark glowing softly. THE JOURNALIST faces AĪSHA BABANGIDA and PAPE SAMB.

THE JOURNALIST (V.O.)

Eighty billion dollars. Every year. And the culprit isn't who you think.

THE JOURNALIST

You put forward a huge figure: 80 billion dollars of accountability lost per year. Where does it come from, and why should I believe you?

PAPE SAMB

Add up three leaks: the extra cost of capital for lack of trust, the projects that fail for lack of local buy-in, and the impact we can't prove and therefore can't finance. The total runs into tens of billions. It isn't stolen money — it's value never created.

THE JOURNALIST

"Never created" is convenient: impossible to verify.

AĪSHA BABANGIDA

On the contrary. Every project abandoned because the community wasn't heard can be counted. Every financing refused for lack of proof can be documented. We're not talking about a feeling. We're talking about a cost.

THE JOURNALIST

Granted. How does APA reduce that cost?

PAPE SAMB

By turning trust into data. A project verified by APA reaches the investor with its proof already done: audited governance, consulted community, measurable impact. You remove the uncertainty premium at the source.

THE JOURNALIST

And if the proof is bad? If the project fails anyway?

AĪSHA BABANGIDA

Then it loses its seal. That is accountability:
a standard that sanctions. A label you can never lose protects no one.

— THE PROOF —

PAPE SAMB

Our dashboard tracks impact over ten years, not a snapshot. The accountability deficit is exactly what this tool makes visible — and therefore reducible.

What isn't measured gets lost. We measure — so Africa stops losing.

FADE OUT.
